DAVID: What do you think of Elizabeth, Mary?

DAVID: What do you think of Elizabeth, Mary? MARY: I think she's rather stupid. DAVID: Oh, I don't agree. She's clever. I like her. MARY: Oh, I'm not. She's stupid. I know you do. She's fairly good-looking, of course, but rather stupid. DAVID: You're just jealous of Elizabeth. MARY: Yes, I know you think I'm rather jealous of her, but I'm not. DAVID: Well, let's change the subject. Do you find travelling difficult these days, Mary? MARY: Sometimes. If I go home at five o'clock the buses and trams are rather crowded. If I go back after six o'clock, the buses and trams are fairly empty. DAVID: Did you notice the advertisements about those fairly were— Elizabeth is fairly good-looking. The buses and trams are fairly empty after six o'clock. MARY: I think Elizabeth is rather stupid. David thinks I'm rather jealous of her. At five o'clock the buses and trams are rather crowded. DAVID: Those sentences all expressed qualities or facts that were not desirable, not satisfactory. That isn't an absolute rule, but it will help you to use these two words correctly. Now there's one more point to note. Listen to Mary and David again. MARY: I've been trying to buy a new hat to-day. DAVID: And were you successful? MARY: No, I saw one that I liked very much, but the price was rather more than I wanted to pay. There were two others I liked, but one was rather larger and the other rather smaller than I wanted. DAVID: I saw one that I liked very much, but the price was rather more than I wanted to pay. There were two others I liked, but one was rather larger and the other rather smaller than I wanted. DAVID: I saw one that I liked very much, but the price was rather more than I wanted to pay. There were two others I liked, but one was rather larger and the other rather smaller than I wanted.

TEACHER: The BBC brings you ENGLISH BY RADIO.

TEACHER: The BBC brings you ENGLISH BY RADIO. Listen in this lesson for the two words fairly and rather. Fairly, fa-i-r-ly fairly, and rather, ra-th-er, rather. DAVID: You look rather tired, Mary. MARY: I am rather tired. I didn't get to bed until rather late last night. My mother wasn't well. DAVID: Oh, I'm sorry. How is she to-day? MARY: She's fairly well to-day, thank you. DAVID: We're using the words rather and fairly, aren't we? MARY: Yes. Can you explain the difference between them? TEACHER: It's fairly easy to explain, I suppose. MARY: Is it? DAVID: Fairly easy? I think it's rather difficult. Let's leave the explanation to the teacher. He's generally fairly good at explanations. TEACHER: It's kind of you to say so, David. This difference, the difference between fairly and rather, is rather difficult. But we'll try to explain it. Let's have all the adjectives with which rather was used. MARY: Rather tired; rather late; rather difficult. TEACHER: Now the adjectives with which fairly was used. DAVID: Fairly well; fairly easy; fairly good. TEACHER: You see, we generally use rather with adjectives expressing an unpleasant or undesirable idea, some-
